

Happy Hooker Comes inland

By Sara Wallace

ONE of America's most famous madams is to lay bare the truth in inland Andalucia this Autumn.

Xaviera Hollander, known for her 1971 memoir The Happy Hooker, will speak openly about her juicy escapades at a meeting of the Amigas de Casa women's group in Trabuco. As a former madame, callgirl, Penthouse columnist, and theatre producer, Hollander now operates a guesthouse in Marbella called Villa Caprice.

Her famed memoir – which was turned into a film starring Lynn Redgrave, who died this year – has sold over 16 million copies. It was notable for bringing sexual liberation into the open more than ever before. But in 1971 she was arrested for prostitution in New York and was forced to flee the US. Like controversial film director Roman Polanski – who was accused of raping a 13-year-old girl – she has never been back to the States and has not faced trial.

Hollander intends to dedicate the session to helping her audience better understand human sexual relations and become 'better lovers' themselves. Anyone can attend the colorful event in October for just five euros. For more info call 952031478.
